THROUGH THE VEIL Of all the customs that prevail, I think that kissing through the veil Is one of just about the worst.— And said so from the very first.

Why women want to squeeze and press Each other's necks in fond careas, And make it quite a public show, This aged party wants to know.

We never dreampt, in my young days, Of kissing in such varied ways; But thought it far more pleasant then, To have it done by gentlemen. Of course no lady could feel proud To have it done before a crowd, But always found a proper place And time to manage an embrace.

How quickly then their sweethearts learnt, They seemed reluctant when they weren't, But used at Christmas time to go, Quite calmly 'neath the mistletoe, Now on all sides it seems the rule. For girls to kiss through vells of tulle; Or through transparent Cluny lace, To do the loving, face to face.

With lip to lip, and hand to glove, As if they did it out of love; It being but a specimen Of art, to tantalize the men. But for my part I can't believe In any better plan than Eve Contrived; and all accounts record She was the first to love her lord.
